

Politics at the Hinckley Institute

Scholarships established through major grant from Ben D. Wood

Calling the news a "landmark in the history of the Hinckley Institute of Politics," R.J. Snow, Institute director, announced the establishment of the Ben D. Wood Internship and the Robert H. Hinckley Graduate Scholarship.

The awards are funded through a major grant provided by Wood and International Business Machines. Endowment earnings "will be carefully awarded as scholarships to outstanding students who will appreciate and use the opportunities to benefit society through political involvement," says Snow. The first awards will be given at the University of Utah in 1984.

"Ben Wood has been among Mr. Hinckley's most cherished friends since they were first associated in federal government service over 40 years ago," says Snow. As assistant secretary of commerce for aviation, Hinckley initiated what Wood calls "the air conditioning of America. I was the first man Bob recruited in his foresighted efforts to prepare the United States for World War II," says Wood.

Wood, 88, is professor emeritus at Columbia

University, New York City, where he was director of the Bureau of Education Research for 25 years. The native Texan is a pioneer in collegiate education research, having written numerous books and articles on education and testing. His service with Hinckley in Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal administration included formulation of the pilot training program that Wood says shortened World War II by two years. During the war he was chairman of the National Aviation Education Commission. He also served as consultant to IBM.

Wood was a "Politician-in-Residence" at the Institute for the unveiling of Hinckley's portrait in 1974. Hinckley calls him "one of the best there is."

The Hinckley Scholarship is a companion award with the Abrelia Clarissa Hinckley Graduate Scholarship. They are both given to outstanding first-year graduate students preparing for careers in politics and public service.

The Wood Internship is given to outstanding students serving public policy internships in the federal government.

Coffee & Politics

The world comes here

Since the program was launched in 1965, Coffee and Politics has brought hundreds of public figures before University students to be challenged on current issues.

Student hosts schedule speakers at least twice weekly in the Hinckley Caucus Room. The hour-long sessions are informal open forums consisting of a short presentation by the guest speaker followed by a question-and-answer period.

Coffee and Politics sessions during spring quarter 1982 focused on speakers of international prominence. Alan Lee Williams, from the United Kingdom, a member of the New Social Democratic Party and former Labour member of Parliament, discussed "The Social Democratic Party and Foreign Policy." He called Argentina's bold aggression to occupy the Falkland Islands "a classic stalling tactic of a withering government trying to provide diversion for a dissatisfied populace."

The pendulum swung from international affairs to Utah's 90-year-old former Gov. Herbert B. Maw. His "good old days" talk about supply-side economics and anecdotes from the downswing of the Great Depression to the upswing in economic output during World War II captivated an overflow audience.

Sessions during fall quarter 1982 proved the Hinckley Institute is a hub for electioneering. Candidates from all parties joined debates and forums to discuss issues ranging from the economy and nuclear arms to the University's budget and tuition problems.

Contrasting views of the Utah legislature were the focus of sessions during winter quarter 1983. Rep. Mike Dmitrich, D-Carbon, House minority leader, presented "A Democrat's View of the 1983 Legislature" followed by "A Republican's View of the 1983 Legislature" from House Majority Leader Robert Garff, R-Salt Lake. Dmitrich predicted a "very austere" state budget with neither tax increases for the public nor salary increases for state workers. Garff agreed but suggested there would be some "political pushing and shoving" to gain the "power of the purse strings."

Domestic and international issues dominated spring quarter 1983. From public policy and civil rights to the economy and defense, the U.S. perspective was well documented. Foreign speakers from India, Uganda, Japan, Great Britain and West Germany discussed issues relating to their countries.

Other topics and speakers were:

SPRING 1982

"Press Conference" — Daniel Ellsberg, former nuclear specialist for the Defense Department; "Reagan's Federalism: What's Happening to the Three Levels of Government" — David Walker, Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations;

"Running for Office" — Sen. Frances Farley, D-Salt Lake; "American Policy in Central America and the Caribbean" — Barton Bernstein, Stanford University; "Report From Washington" — Rep. the Nuclear Arms Race" — Gen. George J. Keegan, Air Force, and Toby Moffett, former congressman from Connecticut; "Press Con- ference" — Victor Olano, U.S. office of The Faribundo Marti National Liberation Front — Democratic Revolutionary Front.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, stated his platform at the Institute during his 1982 race. Hatch and Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, fielded questions from a filled-to-capacity caucus room.

From the Director...

This has been a landmark year for the Hinckley Institute of Politics. Beginning in the fall with a flurry of campaign activity and dozens of intern placements, our staff has worked hard to keep up with programming, correspondence, recruiting, counseling, scholarship awards and arrangements for our 13th Robert A. Taft Institute of Government Seminar. We are delighted that another year of activity has influenced several thousand lives in ways we hope will stimulate more political awareness and responsible participation.

This newsletter brings to our alumni and friends detailed information about our programs and some of our outstanding students. We were delighted with the Truman Scholarship winners, our Abrelia Clarissa Hinckley Graduate Scholars, and the establishment of the Robert H. Hinckley Graduate Scholarship and the Ben D. Wood Internship. We are also proud such illustrious names as Bamberger, Michael, Siciliano, Taft, Wood, Truman, Porter, Lawrence and Brockbank, along with such important corporate names as ARA, ABC, IBM, Foremost-McKesson and Campbell, are associated in perpetuity with the Hinckley Institute.

The Institute was established with private gifts, and all of its special programs are made available from gift income. We continue to appreciate financial support from those who have benefited from the internships or who share our commitment to provide support for the political process. Call us if you want to know how we can use your gift.

Sincerely,

R.J. Snow
Director, Hinckley Institute of Politics

Two students win Truman Scholarships

For the first time in the six-year history of the Harry S. Truman Scholarships, two students nominated by the University of Utah received the prestigious award.

Nancy Ewan Y. Wang, 18, and Cornell W. Clayton, 23, received the scholarship given to outstanding students preparing for careers in public service. Educational awards of up to $5,000 yearly for four years were awarded to over 125 sophomores nationwide.

Wang, an East Asian studies major, will continue her education next year at Harvard University. She hopes to influence public policy and further scientific development in the underdeveloped countries of Eastern Asia. The East

High graduate is fluent in three languages and has taught English at Jilin University in the People's Republic of China.

Clayton, a political science and history major at the University, plans to go into international law and international relations. The Bountiful High graduate is married and plans to apply his scholarship toward law school at either Johns Hopkins University or Columbia University.

The Harry S. Truman Scholarship Foundation was established by Congress as an official federal memorial to honor the 33rd U.S. president. The cash awards are provided from interest earned by a $30 million trust fund.

Jesse Gallegos, Bamberger Intern

Gallegos serves as Bamberger Intern

Jesse Gallegos, Salt Lake City, received the Gov. Simon Bamberger Internship in State Policy. Gallegos served as U of U intern coordinator for the 1983 Utah Legislature.

The Bamberger internship is funded through a grant from the Herbert I. and Elsa B. Michael Foundation. Interns gain "hands-on" experience in state government, according to R.J. Snow, Institute director. He says "they observe and experience the interaction of interests that results in decisions for Utah citizens."

Gallegos supervised 27 interns sponsored by the Institute. "In fact," he says, "I worked with interns from all the schools." He directed interns to research sources and helped work out schedule conflicts between the legislator(s) and the intern. Gallegos ran the "internroom," a 30-by-15 windowless room containing three phones, four typewriters and 40 interns.

This year's interns rapidly developed a bond of friendship characterized by the sharing of political views, Gallegos says. Having "floor access" in both legislative chambers "allowed me to observe the political machines in operation," he notes.

Gallegos graduated last year with a degree in political science. He plans to attend graduate school in law or public administration. Past Institute experience includes hosting Coffee and Politics, 1980 Winterim and a prior legislative internship. He works for the Utah Department of Finance in warrant disbursement.

The Michael Foundation has contributed to the University since 1976. Elsa Bamberger Michael was a direct descendant of Simon Bamberger. Utah's fourth governor (1916-20), a German-born immigrant, was a strong advocate of education.

Angela Harwood is Siciliano Intern

Angela Harwood combines a long time interest in education with a political science background as the 1983 Rocco C. Siciliano Public Policy Intern. Siciliano Internships assign recipients to federal departments and agencies for three-month periods of congressional liaison training.

Harwood spent the spring quarter working with a governmental and professional liaison for the American Education Research Association. "Lobbying is very interesting," she says. "I worked with several education coalitions promoting some ideas that have become bills." She also edited policy statements and attended congressional hearings. "I poured my heart into that internship," she says of her 40-50 hour work weeks.

Serving a prior internship with Gov. Scott M. Matheson was superb preparation for Washington, D.C., says Harwood. "But you see the government from a different perspective because everything is so much bigger in Washington."

The Internships are provided through a grant from ARA Services, Inc. honoring Siciliano, a U of U graduate who received a Distinguished Alumnus Award in 1967. His public career includes a stint as President

Angela Harwood, Siciliano Intern

Eisenhower's special assistant for personnel management, and tenures as undersecretary of commerce and assistant secretary of labor. He also served on the Federal Pay Board from 1971-73.

Teachers converge for 13th Taft refresher course

Teachers from Utah, Idaho, Nevada, Wyoming and Colorado received a refresher course in the American political system during the 13th Robert A. Taft seminars at the Hinckley Institute. The program is held during 10 days in June.

The high school teachers attended workshops, discussion sections, special luncheons and lectures involving more than 80 politicians, administrators and others experienced in the American political system. The participants met with officials from both the Democratic and Republican parties, representatives of minority groups, women's leaders, judges and officers of state and local court systems, current and former members of the executive branch of both national and state government, mayors, city and county officials, pollsters, campaign strategists, fund raisers, educators, media organizers and candidates.

According to seminar directors R.J. Snow and J.D. Williams, the program enables social science teachers and administrators in the Intermountain Region to strengthen their knowledge of American politics. With this knowledge they can help their students appreciate the system. The seminar emphasizes the importance of students and teachers becoming involved in politics.

Comments from participants such as "it was the best seminar I've attended" and "it will help us to be better teachers and better citizens" attest to the program's success at the University of Utah.

The Hinckley Institute joins with the Robert A. Taft Institute, created in 1961 to honor the late Sen. Robert Taft, R-Ohio, in co-sponsoring the event. The nonpartisan, tax-exempt Taft Institute stimulates an understanding of the principles and problems of government; it inspires more active citizen interest and participation in government at all levels; and it advances the science of government, to help citizens more effectively meet the problems confronting the United States and Western civilization.

Former House budget chairman cautions on the possibility of economic disaster

Robert N. Giaimo, 30th Politician-in-Residence, says 1983 is the year to solve budget problems.

Robert N. Giaimo, a Democrat who served as Connecticut's Third District congressman for 22 years, visited the University in November as the Hinckley Institute's 30th Politician-in-Residence.

Giaimo, an authority on the federal budget, says spending is still spiraling out of control. The budget crisis is so serious, he contends, that failure to deal with it portends continued gigantic deficits and possible economic disaster.

While he views 1983 as a non-election year with a "window of opportunity" to make the difficult decisions necessary to manage the federal budget, no simple solutions exist to end the crisis, he said during his November 15 and 16 visit.

In addition to speaking at a Coffee and Politics session, Giaimo appeared in classes, held a press conference, met with politicians, community leaders and public administrators, and was honored at several banquets.

Every year the government spends $15 billion more than it takes in, Giaimo says, and "that amount may well increase in the next few years unless drastic steps are taken." Budget cutting has now reached the "gut issues" level, he says, and it's time to consider cutting into three sacred cows — entitlement programs, defense and taxes.

Giaimo, who describes himself as a "moderate, Northeastern liberal," entered Congress in 1958. He says his vote to set up Medicare was "one of the greatest I ever cast." He is also proud of his continuing fight to increase federal involvement in education.

Giaimo sat on the House Appropriations Committee for years and spent his last four years as chairman of the House Budget Committee. He voluntarily retired from Congress in 1980 and currently lobbies for United Technologies.

The federal budget is Giaimo's major interest. Along with other political and business leaders, he formed the bipartisan Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget. As co-chairman, he travels the country preaching fiscal restraint and budget reform.

Hinckley Scholar selected; study awards presented

Renee Morita

Renee Morita, a first-year graduate student in public administration, is the 1983 Abrelia Clarissa Hinckley Scholar. Graduate study awards with stipends were presented to Jennifer Falk and Allison Sadr.

The scholarship was established in 1975 by Robert H. Hinckley as a memorial to his wife, Clarissa. She combined family devotion with a commitment to politics and citizen participation.

Morita is a student staffer at the Institute and as an undergraduate accepted four internships, including a Washington, D.C. internship with the American Education Research Association and another trip to the nation's capital for Winterim, a three-week intensive course on the federal government. She was vice president of the Asian American Students Association and of the Salt Lake City Junior Japanese American Citizens League.

Morita receives a $3,500 award for graduate school tuition and related expenses.

She received a B.S. in political science from the University, applying her emphases in American government and journalism to several political campaigns. She is currently a state employee for the Administrative Office of the Courts in personnel administration.

Jennifer Falk is a magna cum laude graduate from Utah State University in history with a Spanish minor. She is a second-year U of U law student and is on the Women's Law Caucus board of directors.

She is a member of Phi Kappa Phi honor society and received the 1981 USU Faculty Women's League Democracy Award. She enjoys volunteer community and political campaign work.

Allison Sadr is a second-year student in the U of U College of Nursing with a 4.0 grade point average. She has a B.A. in Near East Studies and a master's in public health, both from the University of California at Los Angeles.

Sadr has lived in Iran where she was involved in a health project, organized a parent/teacher association and helped set up a dental clinic. Since returning to the U.S., she has focused on family health issues. Sadr has lobbied for legislation promoting family health funding and plans to use her nursing degree as an active family health provider.

Student hosts and public relations interns for 1982-83 were Kirsten Terry, Victoria K. Johnson, David E. Simmons, Margaret Hillyard, Cornell W. Clayton, Nancy Ewen Y. Wang, David C. Gessel, Sally Buck and Paul Clayton.

Frank Hewlett Day

Frank Hewlett Day, June 6, 1982, honored the former Salt Lake Tribune Washington correspondent. Hewlett donated his 1,000-piece collection of political campaign memorabilia to the Institute. Although Hewlett served in Washington from 1948 until retiring in 1981, the collection spans the 20th century. Among those attending were Sam Weller (standing), Calvin W. Rawlings, Robert H. Hinckley and Hewlett.

Top high school students receive Brockbank Awards

Brockbank High School Political Participation awards of $125 each were given to the top four students among 15 selected for political internships by the Utah Association of Student Councils.

The award is funded through an endowment provided by former state senator W. Hughes Brockbank to introduce high school students to the political process.

"The goal of the Institute is to train and encourage young people to seek careers in politics and public service and to encourage citizen participation," says R.J. Snow, Institute director. "This award helps develop leadership abilities enabling students to make a valuable contribution to their school and community."

The interns spent 10 hours per week during a four-month period working at either Republican or Democratic Party state headquarters. They were involved in a wide spectrum of activities including constituent and special interest group services, fund-raising, legislative interests and party recruitment.

This year's awards were given to Tamara Warner, Granger High School, West Valley City, and Sam S. Simos, Judge Memorial High, Salt Lake City, both to Republican headquarters; and Vicky Rowley, Granger High, and Julie Gayle Nelson, Springville High, Springville, Democratic headquarters.

Brockbank awards for 1983 were given to students serving at political party headquarters. Kent Bartschi of high school services shown with winners Julie Gayle Nelson, Tamara Warner, Vicky Rowley and Sam Simos along with R.J. Snow, Institute director.

Books & Banter

The Books and Banter program offers weekly book reviews covering a wide range of topics of current interest. Knowledgeable reviewers from the campus and community are invited by student hosts to discuss books relating to their specific fields.

The books, authors and reviewers were:

SPRING 1982

"The Washington Reporters" by Stephen Hess — Lucky Severson, KUTV; "America Held Hostage" by Pierre Salinger — Ted Capener, Bonneville International; "Bitter Grounds: Roots of Revolt in El Salvador" by Lisa North — Edward Epstein, political science; "Yellow Rain" by Sterling Seagrave — Noel H. Winterim offers students a look at operations of federal government

For the fourth consecutive year, 13 University students took a first-hand look at the Washington scene during Winterim '83, a three-week seminar on American government cosponsored by the Hinckley Institute and the Washington Center for Learning Alternatives.

Students focused their attention on "President Reagan and the New Congress: Consensus or Confrontation?" The seminar, held Jan. 1-22, gave 225 students from across the country a chance to study domestic and international issues and policy formulation.

They also had the opportunity to discuss and analyze such topics as foreign affairs, foreign policy, nuclear arms, the economy, party politics and lobbying, political news reporting, business and public policy and human/civil rights.

An "advanced research track" accommodated the special needs of upper-level undergraduate and graduate students. In addition, a specialized track — introduction to the federal

Jennifer Frost gets ABC experience as Lawrence Intern

Jennifer R. Frost was the 1983 William H. Lawrence Intern with the Washington News Bureau of the American Broadcasting Co.

Frost was introduced to all phases of a television news bureau operation. During January she worked with network correspondents who cover such "beats" as Capitol Hill, the White House and the State Department.

The annual internship was established in 1977 to honor Lawrence who died in 1972 following a distinguished career as a political reporter for ABC. Lawrence was a long-time associate of Robert H. Hinckley, principal benefactor of the Hinckley Institute and a founder and former vice president of ABC.
