Autumn 1990

“Bae’s Kids” Return to Salute 23-Year Career

The rich golden sunset viewed from the Panorama Room, the audience of institute friends, alumni, and supporters, and the twenty-fifth anniversary celebration of the Hinckley Institute of Politics were all part of a magical evening May 10, 1990. But the real magic was the love and regard of “Bae’s Kids” who came to wish her well as she retired from her splendid twenty-three-year career with the institute.

Bae Bishop Gardner joined the Hinckley Institute’s staff soon after its founding in 1965. She told charter director J.D. Williams that she would be able to work only three months. But then she discovered her “kids;” it was love at first sight, and twenty-three years later, she has decided to retire so she and her husband Kelly can “kick up their heels a little.”

At the start of the banquet, director Ted Wilson warned the audience that Bae’s natural modesty might make her very uncomfortable during the evening. “The only difference between a real politician and Bae is that Bae probably will not enjoy all the nice things that will be said about her.”

Then “Bae’s Kids” took over. Guy Hicks announced the Bae B. Gardner Internship for Public Policy to Bae and the institute. He said, “It’s been Bae who has given the institute its wings. This internship is meant to be a thank you from all your former interns who contributed over $10,000 to establish the internship endowment.” Utah State Senator Fred Finlinson, who traces his original political aspirations to the institute and Bae, said, “It has been in the role of gatekeeper that Bae has contributed the most by bringing the best students to the institute.”

Jim Davis, Mayor of South Salt Lake City, said, “I’ve always looked forward to that annual call from Bae saying she had this terrific student who would make a great intern in my office. She had such love in her voice. I will miss those calls.”

Kristy Draper, a recent university graduate who has risen quickly to a key position with the Utah Economic Development Corporation, credited much of her success to Bae. She said, “Bae didn’t just work at the institute. Bae was the institute.”

For Bae B. Gardner, former assistant director, the Hinckley Institute was “home” for 23 years.

Betty Nibley, founder Robert H. Hinckley’s daughter, tenderly recalled Bae’s close relationship with her father and said, “When love and talent work together you can expect a masterpiece.” J.D. Williams, in summing up the evening, also reminisced about Robert H. Hinckley’s feelings for Bae: “There was a rare communion between the founder and this woman who kept it all together.”

Bae Gardner will be missed at the Hinckley Institute for many things, but perhaps it was this deep association with Mr. Hinckley and her profound understanding of what he wanted for the institute that will be missed most of all. With Bae Gardner goes a great sense of the history and development of the institute.

But, as Hinckley Board Chairman, Robert H. Hinckley, Jr., said, “We didn’t send out tonight’s invitation with a black border. Hey, this is a party.” In that spirit, Mr. Hinckley awarded Bae a permanent membership on the governing board of the institute so her expertise will not be lost.

Perhaps the memory of Robert H. Hinckley was served best at the end of the evening when Bae shed a few tears and said, “I guess I’m a politician after all. I really enjoyed it tonight.” Robert H. Hinckley would have no higher calling for Bae.

From the Director

Retirement Brings Staffing Changes

The retirement of Bae Gardner last April touched off the most sweeping personnel changes in the institute's history. After getting over the shock of Bae's announcement, I quickly found that it would be impossible to replace her. There was simply no one who had Bae's rare combination of skills.

My ace in the hole was that we had trained outstanding individuals who could perform parts of Bae's job. After extensive interviews, I decided to recruit within the existing staff. I opened up two new positions, Program Coordinator and Intern Coordinator, and invited applications. Carolyn Allen, my Executive-Secretary, decided not to compete, needing time for her school-aged children. Jayne Nelson, former Executive-Secretary, was appointed Program Coordinator and Pat Ryan, former Special Events Coordinator, became Intern Coordinator. Bae's former responsibilities were divided up between Jayne and Pat. Immediately after, we hired Jennifer Bishop to the position of Administrative-Secretary.

I am proud of the entire staff. Without exception, they are non-traditional working women who have returned to work on campus after raising families. With ability equal to the task and love for the students, they have proven themselves and have entered higher-level professional jobs. I want to publicly thank them for caring deeply for the institute and its students.

Snow Intern Works On Drug Legislation

Tara Alessandri, U political science graduate, is the recipient of the R. J. Snow Internship in Public Policy. It was established in 1986 by a group of former Hinckley Institute interns to honor past director of the Institute for 10 years, Dr. R. J. Snow.

Tara served as an intern during winter quarter 1990 with the National Association of Chiefs of Police. While there she worked on a drug-free zone project, calling states to educate and lobby them in support of local anti-drug legislation. As a result of her efforts, six or seven states were able to successfully pass anti-drug bills. She is currently working in a paid position with the Chiefs of Police National Drug Task Force, a non-profit organization dedicated to implementing a comprehensive national campaign to reduce the demand for drugs in America.

"I feel like I am making a difference in doing some good," says Alessandri. "The most important aspect of my internship, in fact of any internship experience, is the contacts I have been able to make. If it weren't for my internship I wouldn't be working here now."

Tara will decide in the near future whether she will continue working with the task force or accept placement with the Peace Corp. in a French-speaking African country. Either way, she looks forward to attending law school afterward somewhere in the east.

Severin L. Sorensen, current deputy director for the National Association of Chiefs of Police and a former Hinckley intern, says he has been pleased with the quality of interns he's worked with that have come from the Hinckley Institute.

Steven Studdert applauded quality of young people in government at alumni banquet.

Former Bush Aide Addresses Alum Banquet

Steven Studdert, former appointment secretary to Presidents Bush and Reagan, addressed approximately 175 former interns and guests attending the annual intern alumni banquet November 8, 1989, in the Saltair Room at the University of Utah Olpin Student Union building.

The former executive director of the American Bicentennial Presidential Inauguration Committee and special assistant to Presidents

Reagan and Ford gave attendees an inside view of White House affairs and pointed out the importance of involvement in politics at all levels in his speech, "The Politics of a New Era."

He applauded the quality of young people currently serving in the Bush administration and encouraged Hinckley interns to continue active participation in government process, thereby strengthen it.

Students Take Inside Look at Leadership Opportunities in the '90s

Six U students learned first-hand about leadership and national politics from leading government, media and business personalities in Washington, D.C., at two symposiums sponsored by the Washington Center for Internships and Academic Seminars. The students joined with approximately 200 students from across the country in attending two consecutive seminars lasting three weeks: "Leaders on Leadership" and "Politics of the 1990s: Inside Washington."

Among those speakers discussing various leadership styles within the public, private and independent sectors were: David Gergen, editor of U.S. News and World Report, who shared White House communication strategies for the Reagan administration; Frank Havlicek, Washington Post, discussed recent historical periods in which strong leadership was lacking; John Richardson, U.S. Institute of Peace, promoted leadership within volunteerism; Molly Yard, President of NOW (National Organization of Women), discussed the feminization of power; James Aluisi, Prince George's County Sheriff, and Officer Steve Jackson, Metro Police Department, each addressed the seriousness of the drug epidemic and its related crimes in larger cities; and Lou Herzog, MADD (Mothers Against Drunk Drivers) regional director, spoke about leadership coming from within.

Winterim students became acquainted with each other through participation in small group discussions. In addition, they had the opportunity to visit embassies of the Soviet Union, Poland, Japan, East and West Germany, Jordan, Israel and Egypt. Although schedules were tight, they squeezed in tours of the Capitol building; State Department; Supreme Court; White House; Jefferson, Lincoln and Washington Memorials; Arlington Cemetery and the Vietnam Memorial; the National Archives where the original Constitution and Declaration of Independence are stored; and other sites of personal interest, such as The National Geographic Society, ABC News Network bureau and Green Peace offices.

Guest speakers for the final seminar included Bob Schieffer, CBS News correspondent, who promoted journalism as an interesting and worthwhile career whereby participants can make the world a better place; David Broder, The Washington Post, discussed the potential impact of redistricting and reapportionment on the future political environment; Susan King, WJLA-TV news anchor, first interviewed Washington Mayor Marion Barry about his drug arrest; Werner Formos, Population Institute president, discussed problems associated with overpopulation; Mary Eva Candon, Legal Aid Society of D.C., discussed spending limits and public funding for political campaigns; and Michael McCurray, Democratic National Committee communications director, and Michael Hess, Republican National Committee counsel, each discussed their particular perspective in 1990s politics.

Theresa Doty, former Hinckley intern and 1990 Winterim supervisor, says she enthusiastically encourages the use of Hinckley interns. "The reputation of the Institute is impeccable, which adds credibility and opens doors for outstanding students that might not otherwise be available," she says. "There is no other scholastic activity that can provide students with as broad and meaningful an experience as an internship."

Heidi G. Sorenson, 1990 Winterim intern, agrees. "There's no substitute for seeing Washington for yourself, learning how to be more effective leaders and gaining insights into the workings of American government from leading experts with the unique vantage point of their particular sphere of influence," she says. "Everyone should go that can—the experience is invaluable in creating a lasting appreciation for our system of government and discovering future possibilities for working within it."

Law Student and Former Education Intern Captures Abrelia Hinckley Scholarship

Second-year law student and graduate in political science and public administration, Jaqualin Friend, was chosen for the political service-oriented scholarship because of her demonstrated commitment to the community.

As a Hinckley intern, she served at the 1987 State Legislature and in 1986 helped research the potential impact of and lobbied against the Gramm-Rudman Act while interning with the Committee for Education Funding. She also served in the Attorney General's office as law clerk, with Utah Legal Services, in South Salt Lake Mayor Jim Davis' campaign and was editor-in-chief for "Utah Forum," an undergraduate journal for political commentary.

Jaqualin will receive $3,500 for the scholarship established in 1975 by Robert H. Hinckley as a memorial to his wife, Abrelia Clarissa. It is awarded annually to graduate students whose interests, formal training and life goals include a commitment to politics and the ideals which guided Mrs. Hinckley's life.

U Students Awarded Truman Scholarships

Kirk Jowers and Janice Ugaki, both U political science majors, were awarded Harry S. Truman Foundation scholarships, which are given annually to over 100 outstanding students nationwide. One Truman scholar is chosen from each state, with up to 40 additional recipients chosen at large. Each receives up to $7,000 annually for four years—including two years undergraduate and two years graduate studies—covering tuition, books and living expenses.

The two were chosen because of superior academic performance, integrity, communication skills, outstanding potential for leadership in government and related public service.

After 15 or 20 students each submitted applications, public policy essays and recommendation letters, Hinckley committee members interviewed and selected three nominees. By a similar process nationwide, the number of finalists increased to 1300 total, who were then divided into groups of 250 and flown to regional interview sites in the spring.

By May the process was over and scholars were able to meet each other at the Truman headquarters outside Liberty, Missouri, home of President Harry S. Truman. They also had the opportunity to meet prominent political figures Barbara Jordan, the first Black congresswoman, and current EPA director William Riley.

Although the selection process was a long one, Kirk says he's glad he went through it. "It made me nervous, but the experience was very positive. It helped me build my self-confidence by not only surviving but succeeding."

Jowers first served as a Hinckley intern at the Community and Economic Development Office, where he conducted research for a Utah consumer guide. He later interned with Salt Lake County and Congressman Jim Hansen during spring and summer 1989. Kirk hopes to graduate in two years with an international certificate in political science and a minor in Dutch, German and history. He says the scholarship will help his chances to study international law at one of the top ten schools in the country.

Ugaki, who is currently studying Japanese language, politics, trade, finance and investment law in Osaka, Japan, will graduate in June 1992 with a political science and finance degree and Japanese minor. She plans to attend law school with an emphasis on international law, then pursue an international relations career with an emphasis on Japan.

Janice completed a total of three internships one at the Legislative Fiscal Analyst Office, the Supreme Court in Washington, D.C., and the Utah Governor's Office during the 1990 legislative session. "All three were valuable experiences. I learned a lot from them," she says.

The most memorable experience was a party held at the Supreme Court with all the justices in attendance. "It was so incredible to be in the same room, to talk to and sing with them as Chief Justice Rhenquist lead the song 'She's a Grand Old Flag.'" She says she stood next to Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.

Three Students Win $1000 Study Grants

Melinda Christensen, Todd Mitchell and Tineke van Dijk have been awarded $1000 study grants by the Hinckley Institute for graduate work "with an eye toward public service," according to Melinda.

Christensen, 1988 graduate in English and political science, served as assistant to U.S. Senator Jake Garn's press secretary in Washington, D.C. and as Senator Richard Carling's legislative intern, both in 1986. Since graduating, she's been tutoring an Afghan refugee family in English while holding the position of admissions counselor at Westminster College where she helps non-traditional students. Melinda says her husband will take over the tutoring when she goes to law school. "The Hinckley Institute does so much for U students to foster a love for the political process and helped me see it's so important that each of us get involved and make the necessary changes," she says. "I credit the Hinckley Institute with orienting me in the direction of community service."

Mitchell, political science and English graduate, was a Hinckley legislative intern in the Utah Attorney General's office and attended the three-week Winterim "Washington, D.C. Symposium" in 1986. From 1987 to 1989 he served in the Peace Corps as an English teacher and coach in Gabon, Africa. He also will help the volunteer organization in its upcoming recruiting efforts. In addition, he has been directing the Bennon Center's Navajo voter registration project since spring 1990. Speaking of the grant, Todd says, "It's going to be a great help in allowing me to devote my extra time to the project." He plans to complete his masters degree by next summer then work toward his Ph.D.

van Dijk, communication graduate, is currently attending the University of Utah Law School. She previously worked as an independent registered lobbyist with the Committee for Education Funding, a Washington, D.C. lobbying organization, while serving as a Hinckley intern. Tineke also has served as president of the board of directors for Utahns Against Hunger and client coordinator for Utah Legal Services.

Kelly Carlson

Three Designated as Ben D. Wood Interns

Three Hinckley interns have been designated Ben D. Wood Interns for 1989-90. Kelly Carlson served an internship with the Committee for Education Funding, while Brett Smiley and Dan Warnock each served one quarter assignments with Benchmarks, Inc., all in Washington, D.C.

Kelly Carlson is currently a junior in political science working toward an international relations certificate and a Japanese minor. She served an internship with the Committee for Education Funding, an umbrella organization for approximately 100 national education associations, coordinating lobbying efforts for education funding.

Kelly initially had to educate herself by reading about the budget process before she was able to begin other projects. She explained she had the opportunity to be the organization's eyes and ears, reporting results of discussions at hearings because of the small office staff. She also scanned newspapers for education-related articles and compiled data on their state-level counterparts, or education coalitions. Kelly suggests Washington internships offer great opportunities for everyone, even non-political science majors.

Brett Smiley worked on a project to help set up an American hospital in Shanghai, China autumn 1989 while interning at Benchmarks, an international development and consulting firm. He helped develop a report to Congress on cooperative progress between the Peace Corp. and the Agency for International Development. He also kept the company's president up-to-date on political and business climates within client countries.

Smiley says working in Washington gave him a taste for what the city has to offer as an international center, in addition to the opportunities of seeing the area's historical sites. Following this internship, he helped set up legislative committee hearings for the local Economic Development Corp. Smiley, an economics and Spanish senior, plans to pursue a career in international business after obtaining his Master of Business Administration degree.

Warnock, a recent political science graduate, also served an internship with Benchmarks during spring 1990. "It's a great honor to be chosen," he says. "I have the highest regard for the company's president [his boss] Thomas Scanlon, who was my role model for integrity, accomplishment and networking."

While there, he gained insight into how money flows through lobbying efforts to help companies get their products across international borders. He also helped write an extensive proposal for renewal of governmental contracts, coordinated efforts between AID and the Peace Corp. and helped organize trips to China and Mali for his boss.

Before Warnock went to Washington, he served as legislative intern for three state representatives: Reps. Nancy Lyon, Michael Waddoups and Bill Wright, the latter who recently asked him to help with his re-election campaign. Dan hopes to pursue a joint Master of Public Administration and Juris Doctor degree after he works for a few years.

The Ben D. Wood Endowment was established in 1984 to recognize outstanding students serving policy internships in Washington, D.C. Funding was provided through a major grant from Wood, a long-time friend of the late Robert H. Hinckley, with matching funds from IBM. Wood dedicated much of his career to education, serving for twenty-five years as director of the Bureau of Education Research. He also served with Hinckley as a member of President Franklin D. Roosevelt's administration.

Eccles Honor in Business Policy Awarded To Former U.S. Banking Committee Intern

Casey Kleinman, business and political science junior, has been named 1989-90 outstanding George S. Eccles Intern in Business Policy. The award went to Casey for his work with the Senate Banking Committee this year.

As a Washington committee intern, Kleinman worked closely with the General Counsel in general office support, writing constituent letters, researching legislation and archiving savings and loan documents. He also attended banking legislation hearings on foreign trade and the budget deficit.

"The most educational aspect of the internship was seeing how committee staff worked with senators," Casey says. Suggesting more students take advantage of intern opportunities, he asserted, "Everyone can learn about our government no matter where they hold an internship."

After graduating with a Bachelor of Arts in accounting and a Bachelor of Science in political science, Kleinman plans to apply for law school.

Brian Randle

Three U Students Selected as Rocco Siciliano Public Policy Interns

Selected from organizations that regularly host Hinckley interns, three students have been named 1990 Rocco C. Siciliano Interns. They are Alane Falkner, Robert McMaster and Brian Randle.

In 1980, Siciliano, U alumnus and benefactor of the Hinckley Institute, and his company ARA Services established the Siciliano Endowment at the Hinckley Institute to fund the internships in public policy. They continued to add to the original endowment which made possible an increased number of internship opportunities in Washington, D.C. Siciliano served in Washington, D.C. as Undersecretary of Commerce, as Assistant Secretary of Labor and as Special Assistant for Personnel Management for President Eisenhower. He also served on the Federal Pay board from 1971 to 1973.

Falkner, who worked in the curator's office at the Supreme Court, had to give her first public tour the day after she began her internship.

"It was scary at first, but got better," she says. She eventually gave two tours and lectures every day. Her favorites were an occasional private VIP tour inside the court for the justices' family and friends. On one occasion, with a tour of Penn Faulkner award recipients, Justices Brennan and Kennedy shared their favorite book titles with the group. Alane comments she also saw Justice White, who used to play professional football (and is in the National Football Hall of Fame) before he attended law school, playing basketball in the fourth floor gym. Falkner soon will begin law school, having received her degree in political science and communication with a broadcast journalism emphasis.

McMaster, sports medicine student, interned with the National Science Foundation. He helped put together educational packets with an environmental theme for elementary and secondary public school teachers as part of a "National Science and Technology Week" project. For high school students, they promoted a special art competition, called "Global Change—Options for Action." The part of his work he liked best was the educational aspect. Rob says he enjoyed being in Washington, especially the contacts he was able to make with the help of the foundation. While there he visited the George Washington Medical School and science labs. McMaster plans to attend medical school, possibly specializing in pediatrics.

Brian Randle, undeclared sophomore who plans to enter architectural graduate school after he completes his undergraduate work, interned with the Senate Republican Conference in Washington, D.C. He served as assistant manager and even as interim office manager. For his first Hinckley internship, he says it was an invaluable experience. "The best part was seeing how Capitol Hill works from the inside."

ABC Intern Experiences Unique Opportunity In Observing Network News Operation

It's not every day a broadcast journalism student gets the chance to help out and watch the involved and sometimes hectic process of network news production. But that's just what Dondrea Elmquist did when she worked at American Broadcasting Company's Washington, D.C. news bureau.

She traveled from one studio to another, learning about and researching for news programs like "World News Tonight" one month, then "This Week With David Brinkley" another, and later "ABC Weekend News."

The internship was established in honor of William Lawrence, a political reporter for ABC. Lawrence was a close friend of Robert H. Hinckley, founder of the Hinckley Institute and one of the founders and first vice presidents of ABC.

Even before she was awarded the internship, Elmquist was no novice in the newsroom. She anchored and produced her first newscast at Highland High School and before graduating worked at KRSP radio. As a University of Utah senior, she produced and directed the on-campus noontime program "Newsbreak," working closely with the late Roy Gibson, former communication intern coordinator. Later, she also interned as a reporter with KUER and KTVX-Channel 4 news, and still later produced KUER's "Sunday Journal," a once-a-week magazine-type local news program.

Dondrea Elmquist

Hansen and Nichol Named Bamberger State Policy Interns

Two political science and former Hinckley interns Paul Hansen and Jamie Nichol were awarded Governor Simon Bamberger Internships in State Policy for 1989-90.

Hansen, economics senior, served as teaching assistant then as liaison between legislative student-interns and Ted Wilson, Hinckley Institute director. During autumn quarter 1989, he helped arrange guest speakers for the intern training class. While at the Utah State Legislature during the winter 1990 session, Paul helped supervise interns at the Capitol while taking other U classes as well. "I enjoyed being involved in the legislative process and working with the new student-interns. [As supervisor] you're the 'authority' and have to be able to answer most questions," he says. "It was a good learning experience....It teaches you how to work with people, how to motivate them."

Paul, himself a former legislative intern with Senator K. Cornaby the previous year, recalls "The interplay between legislators was fun to observe." He also noticed how much Bae Gardner, retiring assistant director, was openly revered by legislators, who passed a resolution in recognition of Bae's contribution to Utah politics upon her retirement this year.

Nichol, a history junior with a minor in political science, interned as director's assistant at the Utah Governor's D.C. office from January to June 1990. "It was a really good experience," she says, recommending other students take advantage of the Washington experience to expand their horizons. "It was overwhelming but worthwhile," describing the process of getting Utah's second statue of Philo T. Farnsworth, "Father of Television" and Utahn, bronzed and dedicated. Speaker of the House Thomas Foley accepted the statue which now occupies its official place in the House of Representatives' hall. Nichol also helped lobby for legislation, such as the "Motor Voter" bill, which would facilitate voting. She says she would like to fill an internship at the state legislature next year and plans to pursue a career in education before going to law school.

The Governor Simon Bamberger Internship in State Policy is funded through a grant from the Herbert I. and Elsa B. Michael Foundation, a long-time benefactor of the University. Elsa Bamberger Michael was a direct descendant of Simon Bamberger, Utah's fourth governor, who served from 1916 to 1920.

First Year Law Student Wins Robert H. Hinckley Graduate Scholarship for Men

Matt Durham

Matt Durham, former Hinckley intern, was awarded the 1990 Robert H. Hinckley Graduate Scholarship, a $3,500 award which will help cover his tuition and expenses while enrolled at the University of Utah law school.

He has served in many varied intern positions prior to receiving the scholarship. Durham interned as volunteer coordinator for Wayne Owens' 1984 Governor's campaign. In 1986, he helped write a marketing proposal for Benchmarks, Inc. While with Salt Lake County, he worked closely with various political campaigns, researching issues for debate material. Matt also served as legislative assistant on interior issues in Washington, D.C. for Owens in 1987 and then returned to Salt Lake City to work on Wayne's 1988 re-election campaign.

In 1989, Durham completed his bachelor degree in political science. Upon graduation, he applied and was accepted at the U law school where he currently studies.

"The Hinckley Institute has been a great resource and has helped me all the way through college," says Durham. "For me college has been the Hinckley Institute—I haven't done much else. I appreciate everything they've done."

The scholarship was established in 1983 by Dr. Ben D. Wood, a long-time friend of Robert Hinckley, and is awarded to graduate students who share Mr. Hinckley's ideals and who seek careers or professional involvement in government or politics.
