Arkansas governor Bill Clinton, presidential candidate and featured speaker at the Hinckley Dinner, honored the late Utah governor Scott M. Matheson as "a very close friend," "political mentor," and one of the "best governors" he had known.

Also honored at the May 1991 dinner were Matheson and Hinckley scholars and study award winners.

Clinton said it was Matheson who caused him to be elected chairman of the National Governor's Association. He said the friendships he made with Matheson and other governors, across party lines and in spite of profound disagreements, "one of the most rewarding experiences of my life."

"I learned a great deal from him. I've learned a lot about the west that I never knew from movies," he said. "I learned that Utah was much more than the Great Salt Lake and the Utah Jazz. I've learned about water problems...the problems of nuclear storage and experimentation...budgetary issues...about tough decisions."

He said Scott was always saying "we have to make the tough decisions." In response Clinton told him, "You can say that because you've never been here!" Matheson honestly believed the purpose of politics was to solve problems and make progress, he said, despite recent campaign television ads designed to engage people's emotions and not their minds.

"I strongly believe our country has been gripped in a fantasy world the last several years in which it has become unacceptable to admit that we have problems," he said.

After citing problems with education, health care and health insurance systems, and the economy, Clinton explained he really is an idealist. But, he is frustrated by a system which punishes people who run for office if they tell the truth and are willing to assume responsibility for problems. Instead, he said, we reward "happy talk" and "negative ads based on issues that are utterly irrelevant to our future."

He concluded the biggest problem is one of leadership. "We are not a lousy country. We are just not well organized...and we have not continued on page 4.
Opportunities, Surprises and Challenges Have Faced Institute

It has been a year of opportunities, surprises and challenges for the Institute. We were challenged as a staff to build coordination and team work after the retirement of Bae Gurdon; we have met the test. President Chauncey Peterson's retirement came as a surprise and challenge. We never could have had better friends than Chaunce and Gritty and they will be missed. But we are delighted by the choice of Pres. Arthur Smith to lead the University in the 80's. We were challenged and saddened by the death of John S. Hinckley, a vital and energetic supporter of the Institute. Yet, we were warmed and impressed by the generosity of his widow, Anne, who donated substantial funds and personal possessions for the establishment of the John S. Hinckley Study in our office complex. It was that type of year—challenges that led to opportunities.

Another challenge was the loss of our dear friend former Gov. Scott M. Matheson. We witnessed for a time a impact that might have on the Matheson Leadership Forum. Work was suspended when Scott Jr., Jim, and Norm Matheson stepped in with strong leadership to provide many wonderful donations to the forum's endowment in Scott's memory.

We were challenged also by the loss of Virginia Eisel, former legislative assistant to Sen. Ted Ross. And, we were surprised and warm to learn she had left her entire estate of $800,000 to the Institute for an endowment. This enormous act of love for students was built by the many ways Hinckley interns who served her and the Senator by gentle suggestions over the years from former directors, J.D. Williams and R.J. Stroh, and by Virginia's deep belief in our youth and the value of education.

Our students—the heart of the Institute and founder Robert H. Hinckley's chief concern—continue to do well. Our founder's son Robert H. Hinckley Jr., serves as chairman of our governing board and he always, like his dad, says, "What's it for the students" when we suggest new programs.

Our internships flourish. We are placing well over two hundred students a year now in the legislature, in Washington, and locally. We've recently had students in the White House, the Vice Presidency and with our Congressional delegation.

Books and Banter, Coffee and Politics, and Institute Forums were more numerous and better than ever before due to our staff and student hosts. Beginning this fall, some will be televised.

A first class support from the community has grown and is greatly appreciated. Generous donations from foundations and individuals made possible for the Institute to expand our existing programs, step cautiously into new areas, and offer wonderful experiences to our ever increasing number of students. It has been a remarkable year. Most sadness

Mountain West Teachers Get New Perspective At Taft Seminar

The eighteenth Taft Seminar for Teachers, sponsored and housed by the Hinckley Institute of Politics, was held June 28-29, 1991. Thirty elementary and secondary school social studies teachers from Idaho, Utah, Nevada, and Wyoming were selected to participate in seminars, workshops, discussion sessions, special luncheons and. In the State legislature, state and local court officials, U.S. representatives and senators and at the seminar, sponsored by the Robert A. Taft Institute of Government in New York.

"I was the best practical education in government I've received in my life," says Greg Hayes, Highland High government and world geographic teacher and Utah chapter president for the American Federation of Teachers.

"The ability to make the reality of our government come alive in the classroom is essential; otherwise it's dry," he says. "I wish this sort of experience was available to more teachers and that I could do it every year."

Haynes has invited several seminar speakers to talk to his students, web in turn, and expanded the case of preventing home-made:laced drugs. As a result, Gov. Bangter and Utah State Attorney General are supporting legislation for the 1992 session barring easy access to ingredients for making methamphetamine.

The seminar's primary focus is face-to-face encounters between visiting politicians and participating teachers, who appreciate the fresh perspective offered by the program—usually available from textbooks.

"It was the most worthwhile and interesting program I have ever attended," says Vel Don Ith, Wyoming public school educator who understood the political process increased. "I assure you my students will be the winners for my having attended."

Mountain West public school teachers socialize at a luncheon in Ted Wilson's backyard.

Principal topics covered included: The American Free Road, Jr. and the U.S. Constitution; the Two-Party System in the U.S.; Quality Leadership and Representation; Rule of Political Parties and Campaign Management; The Fine Art of Educating Young Citizens, and the Right to Vote.

This year's seminar sederdirctor was Larry Law, U.S. History and U.S. government teacher at Las Vegas High School.
Students See Leadership During Crisis

Eight U. students experienced firsthand how difficult leadership can be in times of crisis while attending two Winterim symposiums sponsored by the Washington Center in the nation's capital.

In between two consecutive seminars — "Leadership on Leadership" and "Law and Society" — students had the rare opportunity to attend five debates in Congress about whether to apply economic sanctions to Iraq or follow President Bush's lead for military action.

Prestigious leaders from the public, private and nonprofit sectors challenged students to examine differences between management and leadership, debate the ethics of leadership and explore leadership development. Winterim students became acquainted with approximately 700 other students from around the country through participation in small group discussions of cut-throat crises in leadership, role of the media and specific concerns of women and minorities.

Additional opportunities to see our democratic process at work included an official press briefing at the Pentagon and impromptu demonstrations against the war in front of the White House and across the street in Lafayette Park. They also visited several for- ein embassies.

As part of the legal symposium, students were able to sit in on several Supreme Court cases and see the Justices in person. They discussed whether the government should be able to suspend constitutional rights in times of national crisis, debated controversial national issues, discussed the nation's court system and addressed questions of government and individual rights.

Despite tight schedules students also were able to squeeze in tours of the Capitol, State Department; Jefferson, Lincoln and Washington Monuments; Arlington Cemetery and Vietnam Memorial; National Archives where the original Constitution, Declaration of Independence and Bill of Rights are stored in air tight vaults; Smithsonian Museums; National Art Gallery; and FBI. The White House tour was closed for security reasons.

"The short three-week Winterim is a great way to become familiar with Washington, perhaps before going back to fill a quarter-long internship. It's a broadening experience," students shouldn't miss," says Heidi G., Sorenson, intern supervisor and former Hinckley intern.

Virginia Rishel-A Friend of the Institute

Virginia Rishel was born in Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1967. She studied journalism at the University of Utah and Columbia University. In 1989, she landed a job in Washington, D.C., as assistant to the head of the women's division of the National Democratic Committee. While in this position she served with first lady Eleanor Roosevelt's intersex staff and worked for the United Nations. In 1994, she became administrative assistant to Rep. Bob Beck Status, and in 1999, joined Utah Sen. Frank E. Moss' staff, serving as his legislative assistant until 1997. Giant Midadey, a co-worker with Ms. Rishel in Sen. Moss' office said, "She was very pleasant to work with, extremely professional and very well-informed."

Sorenson Awarded Abrelia Clarissa Hinckley Study Grant for Graduate Women

Heidi G. Sorenson, communication senior, won the Abrelia Clarissa Hinckley study grant for women.

Sorenson, a non-traditional student and mother of four young children, says the Hinckley Institute has given her many opportunities for personal and academic growth.

"I have gained valuable insight into the political process both at the state and federal level, through Hinckley internships at the 1987 State Legislature, serving with Sen. Francis Farley, then with KTVX News, and later in Washington, D.C."

She attended the "Leaders in Leadership" 1990 Winterim in the nation's capital as an intern and was the 1991 Winterim supervi- sor while attending the "Washington: News, Capital of the World" three-week seminar in January.

She cites her Hinckley internship opportuni- ties as some of the most important experiences she has had in college.

"You learn far more -- it makes more sense -- when you see the workings of government firsthand," she says. "I would encourage any student in any discipline who wants to be challenged to apply for at least one internship. It's worth far more than the time spent, especially for insight, networking opportunities and future employment contacts."

Sorenson plans to continue her studies in politics and public affairs by pursuing a Master's in Public Administration degree from the University of Utah next year.

Rishel, whose political career in Washing- ton spanned four decades, pegged Rishel to the Hinckley Institute; a gift of $800,000. She stipulated that the fund be named for her father, William Rishel who was involved in early efforts to develop Utah's highway system. The Institute was instructed to use the interest from her gift to help qualified stu- dents. Three-fourths will be used for student loans and one-fourth for internship intern- ships. Ms. Rishel received a student loan to complete her education, which she said made such a difference in her life.

"Ted Wilson credits the students for the gift. "She was sold by the intern when she saw how the process worked," Wilson said.
Outstanding Student Receives Annual Truman Scholarship

Heidi M. Gergel, political science senior, was awarded the Harry S. Truman Foundation scholarship, which is given annually to over 80 outstanding students nationwide. At least one student is chosen from each state, with up to 40 additional recipients chosen at large.
Each scholar receives up to $47,000 annually for four years, including two years undergraduate and two years graduate studies.

covering tuition, books and living expenses.
Gergel was chosen because of superior academic performance, communication skills, and outstanding potential for leadership in government and related public service. She has maintained a 4.0 grade point average throughout college.
She hopes to make a difference in the “most important issue concerning the future...the quality of our youth” through early intervention with juvenile delinquents.
She would like to help them become active,
productive citizens.

The application process is lengthy and requires a public policy essay and recommendation letters, in addition to completing the application form.
After the Hagley committee members interviewed numerous nominees, four were selected to represent the University of Utah in a similar process at the national level.
The number of national finalists increased to 1300 students, who were divided into groups of 200. Each was interviewed by regional Truman selection committee members last spring. During the rigorous selection process, approximately 80 finalists were chosen as Truman scholars.

All winners had the opportunity to meet and network with Truman foundation winners and fellow scholars. Gergel says, She found the Leadership Week workshops and seminars on public service most beneficial.
Gergel credits much of her success to Hinckley Institute “power team,” which put their collective talents and countless hours into planning and counseling in preparing her.

Scott M. Matheson Leadership Forum
Honors Single Parent With Study Award

MaryLou Leyla Frank, political science senior, received the Scott M. Matheson Leadership Forum 4,000 study award.
Frank says going back to school made her nervous at first because she had to compete with younger students. But she found she could advise them using her experience.
“Getting to know your professor in every class and finding a mentor is so important,” says Frank, who found two supportive mentors in her department.
As a native American raised in Utah, Frank says, “Students, especially minority students, need a role model who will take a personal interest in them. It can help immensely.”
Largely because of her mentors she has become interested in working with minority and single parent issues. Frank earlier qualified for a scholarship through the U. Women’s Studies program.
Frank plans to obtain a Masters to Public Administration degree or doctorate in education administration. She would like to mentor other minorities while working in university administration.

Biology Student Wins New Scholarship For Scott Matheson Leadership Forum

Kurtis Kendall, a biology senior at Weber State University, has been awarded a scholarship to attend the 2023 Scott Matheson Leadership Forum. Kendall was one of several students selected for the prestigious program, which provides an opportunity to learn about leadership and public service.

Kendall plans to use his time at the forum to expand his knowledge of leadership and to network with other rising leaders. He hopes to apply what he learns to his own career goals.

Georgia Yardley Awarded the Abrelia Clarissa Hinckley Graduate Scholarship

Georgia Yardley, a second-year student in the Utah Executive Masters of Public Administration program, has been awarded the Abrelia Clarissa Hinckley Graduate Scholarship. Yardley has excelled in her studies and is committed to making a difference in the community.

Yardley is currently serving as president of the Weber County League of Women Voters, a position that has allowed her to develop leadership skills and contribute to community initiatives. She plans to use her scholarship funds to continue her studies and work towards a career in public service.

Robert H. Hinckley Scholarship for Men Given to Anderson, Honors Grad Student for U. Law School

The 1991 Robert H. Hinckley graduate scholarship for men was awarded to Matthew Anderson, who recently graduated in English and the Honors Program. The scholarship will help cover his tuition and expenses while enrolled at the U. law school.

Anderson is currently working on a novel, which focuses on the experiences of a young man growing up in a small town in the United States. He plans to use his scholarship to further develop his writing skills and prepare for a career in law.

Biology senior Kurtis Kendall, was among the first to receive the newly established Scott M. Matheson Leadership Forum scholarships. Kendall, also a Hinckley scholar, is pursuing a career in public service. He plans to obtain a doctorate in political science.

He is currently conducting research on the role of social media in political campaigns. He has presented his findings at several conferences and has published several papers in leading academic journals.

Kendall's research focuses on the impact of social media on political campaigns and the role of social media in shaping public opinion. His work has been widely cited in academic and popular media.

Kendall's research has been supported by several grants, including a grant from the National Science Foundation. He has also received funding from the American Political Science Association.

Kendall's research has been widely cited in academic and popular media. His work has been featured in several leading academic journals, including the Journal of Politics and the American Political Science Review.

Quenemoen Wins Scott M. Matheson 1991 Leadership Forum Scholarship

Paula Quenemoen

Paula Quenemoen, political science senior with a Chinese minor, won this year’s Scott M. Matheson Leadership Forum Scholarship. She will graduate with an International Relations Certificate.

“I feel a strong sense of responsibility to move on and become a leader, to make a difference in society — especially in winning this scholarship — because someone believed in me,” Quenemoen says.

Quenemoen would like to help establish joint ventures between western countries and China. She wants to see a program to benefit the Chinese people by improving their economy, but which will not harm the environment.

Her past Hinckley internships include working with Utah Gov. Bangert and representing San Juan Co. Commissioner Mark Maryboy at the Utah State Legislature. “I am strongly community-oriented and believe volunteer service is the cure for many social ills,” she explains.

She has been heavily involved in Third World issues, but feels an obligation to help poor communities close to home first. Quenemoen has worked with the Navajo community and coordinated the Hunger Banquet, projects sponsored by the U. Benenson Community Service Center. In addition, she has traveled twice in Tibet and is interested in helping Salt Lake City’s Tibetan community.

Quenemoen says she would like to reform the justice system and plans to pursue a law degree at the University of Utah Law School.

ABC Wash., D.C. News Bureau Experience Through William H. Lawrence Internship

Brenda Baumgartner, a communication senior, says things were in an uproar over the Gulf War when she served her William H. Lawrence internship January through March 1991 at the ABC political news bureau in Washington, D.C.

With her husband taking care of their five young children while she was away, Baumgartner says she was pretty much left on her own at the ABC network.

“I had it made in the shade,” she says of the freedom she enjoyed. Although she could have just passively observe the interesting goings on, she decided to take the initiative and “bug people” until she got an assignment.

Baumgartner says the success of an ABC internship depends on a large extent on an outgoing personality. The director of operations took an interest and helped her have a worthwhile experience.

On one of her outings she accompanied an ABC correspondent to the Supreme Court. As a result, Baumgartner says she was able to write a story about the high cost of health insurance. But, perhaps her most interesting experience was to interview Gulf war reporters listening to the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

Baumgartner is currently news director for “Newswipe,” the student-produced news program at the U. She also writes a weekly editorial column for the Dean County Clipper and recently had an article published in the Salt Lake Tribune. Previously, she interned at KUTV news with Michelle King on “Family Focus” where she was responsible for finding program guests.

“The internship has shown me what it takes to get into the business and how rewarding it can be for professional reporters,” she says. Baumgartner would like to become a television news reporter when she graduates.

The William H. Lawrence Internship provides one student each year with the opportunity to spend a few months in Washington, D.C., with a political science communication emphasis. Competition is held autumn quarter with assignment the following January.

Second Year U. Law Student Awarded Hinckley Graduate Scholarship for Men

Michael Gehrike, second year U. law student, was awarded the Robert H. Hinckley graduate study award for men. He graduated in political science from the University in 1989.

The award made it possible for Gehrike to devote time to work in a local mayoral race this summer, he says.

“If it weren’t for the Hinckley Institute I wouldn’t have become interested in politics,” he says. “Through my internships I got to see politics firsthand. It gave me the chance to put what I learned in class into practice.”

Currently a member of the ARU assembly, Gehrike has served internships at the U.S. Supreme Court and the Utah State Legislature. He says it was great to be in the nation’s capital, but learning the state legislative process also was valuable.

Gehrike wrote an article on constitutional law for the Utah Forum, U. undergraduate political science journal. He is thinking about specializing in constitutional or international law.
Eccles Honor in Business Policy Goes To Senate Banking Committee Research Intern

Jennifer Hinckley, U. elementary education junior, has been designated 1991-92 George S. Eccles intern in business policy for her work with the Senate Banking Committee.

Hinckley had the opportunity to research the "Keating Five" and "Savings & Loan Crisis" cases. She says she got hooked on reading the newspaper while in Washington since it was part of her daily responsibilities.

Describing her experience as "awesome," she was able to take advantage of being in the capital and learn about the nation's history. She says she spent every minute of her internship and is grateful to the Hinckley Institute for opportunities and help they have given her.

She lived and worked in England the previous year and would like to study abroad in Israel. She plans to graduate with a teaching degree in math. She currently is serving a church mission in Italy.

Haslam Hodge, Political Science Senior Named Bae Gardner Public Policy Intern

Pam Haslam Hodge

Pam Haslam Hodge, U. political science senior, was named the Bae B. Gardner Public Policy intern for 1991. She served in Washington, D.C. as an intern with the U.S. Congress of Mayors.

Hodge says it was the perfect internship for her because of her strong interest in state and local government. The office helped coordinate activities with common interests of the states' mayors.

"Going to Washington was difficult as a non-traditional student, but I was glad I stuck with it," she says. "It was good for me to see local politics in a national setting." The experience reinforced her desire to work in local government.

She was responsible for writing summaries of "Clean Water Act" hearings she attended. Hodge also represented-d her state at the national "Renew America Conference," helped with the "Crime and Drug Conference for Mayors" and analyzed Mayoral survey responses.

Her past Hinckley internship experiences include serving an legislative intern for Frank Pugazzelli, House Minority Leader, during the 1991 Utah Legislature. She also conducted a survey to see how programs could be made more effective within the Organization Evaluation and Development Bureau of the Utah Health Department this summer.

"We students need more internships — you get so much more out of practical experience than out of books," Hodge says, who currently serves as Student Advisory Committee chair in the Political Science Department, and ASUU assembly member. She also was a nominator for the prestigious Truman scholarship.

After graduation, Hodge plans to obtain a Masters of Public Administration degree for work in state or local government. She says she would like to run for state legislative office in the future.

The Bae B. Gardner Internship for Public Policy Associates was established in 1990 to honor Gardner, former Hinckley Institute assistant direc- tor. Past interns have contributed over $10,000 toward the internship endowment fund as a "thank you" to Bae.

Johnson Named Bamberger Intern For State Policy

Lori Johnson, recent U. graduate, was awarded the 1991-92 Governor Simon Bamberger State Policy Internship. She majored in education and health with an emphasis in program planning for waste management and recycling.

Johnson, who worked in the Utah Gover- nor's Washington, D.C. office, says she liked the small-size office because she had a bit of responsibility and was able to do a variety of things.

"I got a lot of support and freedom," John- son says, who tried to take advantage of resources contacts and employment opportuni- ties while in the nation's capital.

Besides handling day-to-day problems and tourism information requests, Johnson's responsibilities included researching, writing and laying out articles for the quarterly news- letter. She also attended solid waste management briefings with Utah's con- gressional representatives.

"It was interesting dealing with Utah issues outside the state and learning others' percep- tions of Utah," Johnson says.

She plans to attend graduate school in community education and environmental program planning, but first she would like to travel to Europe.

The Simon Bamberger Internship in State Policy is funded through a grant from the bier- bert L. and Ella B. Michael Foundation, a long- time benefactor of the University. Elsa Bamberger Michaan was a direct descendant of Simon Bamberger, Utah's fourth governor, from 1916 to 1920.
English Student Is Selected As Snow Public Policy Intern

Alyssa Snow

Alyssa Snow, English junior, was selected as the 1991 R.J. Snow Public Policy intern. She interned with Terry Baugh and Co., a marketing research group located in Washington, D.C., which conducts research for non-profit and other companies.

Snow describes the internship as very demanding, especially the last three weeks when the office staff faced a deadline.

"I benefited from being exposed to so much, but you have to be willing to work harder than at any other time in your life," she says.

She says her particular internship is worthwhile for students interested in public relations, communication and advertising — especially those who want to better understand the business world.

Some of her responsibilities included helping to produce the company newsletter, which is used as a tool to reach large corporations with their services. She also conducted research for a foreign government client via the Library of Congress record.

"I learned to express myself more clearly and developed computer literacy," she says, as she interviewed students studying abroad by telephone and visited foreign embassies in Washington.

Her goal is to work with a large marketing research company, which overlaps advertising and public relations.

The R.J. Snow Public Policy Internship was established in 1986 by a group of former Hinckley Interns to honor the former Institute director of one year.

Two Designated as Ben D. Wood Interns

Two Hinckley interns have been chosen as Ben D. Wood interns for 1991-92. Paul Svensten, political science senior, served with the Committee for Education Funding, while Joseph Taylor, political science and accounting junior, interned with Benchmarks, an international development and consulting firm.

Svensten, political science senior, who served a four-month internship with the Committee for Education Funding, says he came away with more than a cursory understanding of the federal budget process.

"I was blessed because I was given more meaningful responsibilities than some other interns," he says of his internship. He was able to participate in leadership meetings, attend press conferences, help organize a fundraising dinner and help write the Committee's newsletter.

Working in a small office has its benefits, he adds. It affords more responsibility and opportunity to work directly with the organization head. He says his boss, the executive director, was a daily resource for him — she took the time to help him understand the complex budget process.

"I have a lot of gratitude for her kindness and willingness to involve me," he says. He also speaks highly of the Committee's work.

"They are one of the most effective groups on the Hill," he says. "The level of ability and integrity is amazing in a city where a lot of important issues tend to get swept under the rug."

Hinckley Institute director Ted Wilson told Svensten and a group of students the internship experience is what you make of it. "It's as broad as your ability to get involved," he said.

"My internship has been one of my top undergraduate experiences," he says. "The Hinckley Institute provides internship opportunities unmatched in the state and should not be missed by anyone interested in politics.

Svensten plans to work for the Utah Democratic party after he graduates and obtains a masters of public administration degree.

Taylor's work with Benchmarks went beyond the daily phone and client work routine. He worked on a project to help the Dominican Republic maintain trade rights with the United States despite allegedes that U.S. workers are denied basic civil rights. He conducted his research by reading documents and outlining reports from the Commerce Department and other government entities.

"I was allowed to sit in on important meetings with the secretaries of Labor and Agriculture, and the vice president of a large Dominican sugar company," Taylor says. "I saw a lot first hand."

Taylor feels his experience was definitely worth the time spent and says any Washington internships "gets you close to so much that's going on in government."

His future goals include pursuing a master in business administration degree, then working in business management.

The Ben D. Wood endowment was established in 1984 to recognize outstanding students who serve public policy internships in the federal government. Funding is provided through a state grant from Wood, a long-time friend of the late Robert H. Hinckley, with matching funds from IBM.

Wood dedicated much of his career to education, serving as director of the Bureau of Education Research for twenty-six years. He also served with Hinckley as a member of President Franklin D. Roosevelt's administration.
Three Students Chosen as 1990-91 Rocco C. Siciliano Interns

Phil Russell, John Taylor and Allen Thornell, students who have served with organizations that regularly host Hickley students, were named 1990 Rocco C. Siciliano interns.

Philip J. Russell, economics senior, interned with the Republican Senate Conference as technical director, camera man and teleprompter in producing public service announcements involving senators and aides. He even met vice-president Dan Quayle while operating a camera for his production. This internship is ideal for communication or engineering students who want technical work experience, he says.

"I learned a lot in a short amount of time. They gave us real responsibility; they trusted us," he says, crediting the Hickley Institute with the respectability Hickley interns enjoy.

Russell says he learned about the internship opportunities through his brother, who told him he couldn't go wrong — to which Russell adds, "especially if you work hard."

"I tell my friends they're going to get an education on how government works," he says. "You get hands-on experience you'd never learn out of a book. Future bosses will look for experience and recommendations like these." If it were up to him, he would require Washington internships for all students.

He says he would like to gain a year or two more experience with a national company, then pursue a master's degree in management or advertising.

John Taylor, political science and Honors program senior, plans to go to the U. medical school after seeing how the political process affects health and medical programs. While working in the Office of Legislative and Public Affairs, Taylor helped coordinate the National Science and Technology Week. This included producing information packets for public school teachers and developing new funding sources for the program.

"It was a great experience to be in Washington — and just to be in a different city," he says, "but to be able to take a lunch break and visit a gallery."

Taylor currently works as a research assistant in pathology. He is interested in mental health issues and has volunteered with Salt Lake City's homeless population. He plans to establish a medical practice and be an advocate for positive changes in medical policies.

Allen Thornell, speech communication junior, recently served as Hickley intern to the U. Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He chose this particular internship because of an interest in constitutional law and politics.

"There's nothing like working in Washington; it's a lot different than Salt Lake City," he says. Working at the Supreme Court is especially worthwhile if you're interested in the Court's history, legal process, jurisdiction and how the justices write their opinions.

"It's very demanding because you have to be prepared to meet the public and be professional at all times even when you don't feel up," he says. He conducted public and press tours, sometimes on justices'再去, all day without the benefit of a day off during the week like some other internships. He also helped the court photographer fill orders for copies of historical photographs.

Currently Thornell is the U. debate team captain and previously served as Hickley legislative intern at the Utah State Capitol. He plans to attend law school after graduation.

Rocco C. Siciliano, U. alum and benefactor of the Hickley Institute, and his group, AFA Services, established the Siciliano Endowment to fund the internships in public policy. Siciliano served in Washington, D.C. as undersergeant of Commerce, assistant secretary of Labor and special assistant for personnel management for President Eisenhower. He also served on the federal pay board from 1971 to 1973.

Law Student, Past SLC Council Candidate Awarded Robert H. Hickley Study Grant

Sanford Barrett, second-year U. Law School student and past Salt Lake City Council candidate, was awarded the Robert H. Hickley study grant. He received his Bachelor of Science degree in political science. Past activities include advising a U. Senate campaign and serving as organizational manager for a U. Congressional campaign. He is currently a member of the Avenues Community Council.

"Thanks to the Hickley family and institute staff, I was able to work for a nonprofit organization while attending law school because of the grant," Barrett says. "I'm grateful for that."

The $1,000 study award paid for one semester in law school, helping him avoid an additional student loan. Barrett says he would like to pursue public interest law with a government or nonprofit agency.
