Hinckley Course Helps Interns 'Hit the Ground Running'

A rigorous intern training class during autumn quarter will help Hinckley legislative interns, in the words of a legislative leader, “hit the ground running” when they report for their assignments in early 1994.

The 3-credit course, taught by Tod Wilson, Hinckley Institute director, and Dan Jones, dean of Utah pollsters, has played a role in making interns critical contributors to the legislature, says House Speaker Bob Bishop, Salt Lake City and a 1973 legislative intern himself.

Through guest lectures, news quizzes, readings, a term paper and final exam, students not only gain an overview of the legislative branch of state government but learn the “basic, hands-on things interns need to know, like protocol and how to write a constituent letter,” says Wilson, an associate professor of political science.

About 35 students are enrolled in the course this fall. Later in the quarter they will receive their internship assignments. Some will assist a single legislative leader. Others will be assigned to up to three legislators. Still others will assist with legislative liaison work at executive branch offices, such as the Attorney General’s Office and Utah Health Department.

As in years past, the three major Salt Lake City television stations are each expected to have one or more news interns. Interns will also assist with lobbying to groups such as the Utah League of Cities and Towns, AFL-CIO and Utah Issues.

The course curriculum is organized around the various players in the legislative process—the governor, leadership, legislative staff, political parties, media and lobbyist. And the instructors on these topics are Utah’s powerful players themselves.

This fall’s course will kick off with a lecture by Sen. Lybe Hillyard, R-Rigby, influential chair of the Joint Higher Education Appropriations Committee, discussing how to be an effective intern.

Speaker Bishop; House Minority Leader Frank Pignanelli, D-Salt Lake; Senate President Arnold Christensen, R-Sandy; and Senate Minority Leader Scott Howell, D-Salt Lake, will be invited to describe the leadership role in framing political strategy and shaping key legislation.

Powerful lobbyists, including Doug Foxley and David Spatel, who represent private clients, and Lily Eckholm, director of the Utah Education Association, will be invited to explain the role interest groups play in providing information, producing witnesses for hearings and sometimes negotiating the final wording of bills.

Utah’s Republican and Democratic chairs will be invited to discuss the role of political parties, while Bob Berrick, Deseret News political editor; Rod Decker, KUTV political reporter; and possibly other journalists will be invited to discuss the role of the media.

Another important class session is a written seminar taught by Dr. Chryll May, an official with the Utah Court Administrator’s Office. She provides examples of murky bureaucratic and then shows how writing can be made clearer and more succinct.

The course culminates with a trip to the Capitol and a meeting with Gov. Mike Leavitt. Students will also tour their future domain—the Senate and House chambers, committee rooms and the intern room, a spartan facility that, with exception of computers, is reminiscent of a 1973 legislative office.

But the course goes well beyond sit-and-listen. Students are required to read all information in the Deseret News and Salt Lake Tribune that could come up in the session. There’s a weekly quiz, and although the questions are trivaful, “If you’ve just read the headlines you can’t answer them. You have to know the details,” says Paul Flanagan, a 1993
From the Director

Ted Wilson

It was another exciting year. National politics kept our students busy volunteering for Bush, Perot and Clinton in an exciting election. 1993 Mackenzie Forum speaker Bill Clinton won and many students felt close to him because of his appearance here. Women candidates were exciting with Karen Shepherd, Estelle Greene and Jan Graham capturing our students' talents and enthusiasm. Along with the elections, the issues of budget deficits, economics, health care, abortion, national service and student loans kept college students in the thick of it.

Our practical politics course was taught by myself and David Butcher. Dave is Norm Bangert's former campaign manager and ran for mayor of Salt Lake City in 1991. We joked with our students that I was there to make sure they didn't all become Republicans and he was there to make sure they didn't all switch to Democrats. The bipartisan approach worked because it allowed some fun in-class sniping and spontaneous debate on campaign issues. Many of our practical politics students later went on to serve internships in the Intern Preparatory Program course for the state legislature. I taught with Dan Jones, faculty member and Utah's best pollster, to prepare our forty interns for the state legislature.

One of the great happenings this year was the joint sponsorship of the Taft Seminar for Teachers with the Benson Center. It is the first program we have tooned with the Benson Center on We Travelled to the Navajo Reservation and studied Navajo voting rights, volunteered our labor and learned the value of service learning. We also spent time visiting archaeological sites. Our teachers had not only an educational but an important emotional experience as they learned of the dignity of the Navajo people and their difficulties. It will pay important dividends in the quality of teaching in each of the teacher's classrooms.

We have begun a Bill Rishel Memorial Fund which provides student internships for women students according to the stipulations of the generous $800,000 gift of Virginia Rishel. This fund will continue into the future to provide loans and internships for our deserving women students.

One of the great happenings this year was the joint sponsorship of the Taft Seminar for Teachers with the Benson Center.

Our student advisory committee met often, initiated many projects and helped make the institute more commodious for our academic friends. We wish to thank Paige Peterson, chair, and all of her officers and members for their tremendous support.

There were also several events on campus, scholarship winners including former intern and Truman Scholarship winner Jamie Ukagi who was named to a Rhodes Scholarship.

It was a great year. Because of our students, we have grown accustomed to that.

intern who will be the legislative intern supervisor for the 1993 course and 1994 legislative session.

The students will write a term paper giving their informed judgment about what issues will preoccupy the 1990 Legislature and predicting how those issues will be resolved—no small challenge even for veteran legislative observers.

Required reading includes the Utah Legislative Manual, published by the Utah Legislature; the Intern Training Manual, published by the Legislative Information Office; and a packet dealing with rules and procedures, such as what color paper various versions of a bill are printed on as it navigates the Legislature.

Annie-Katharine Pintgre Pignmure, a 1992 intern to Sena. George Manter, D-Tooele; Winn Richard, D-Ogden; and Joseph Hill, D-Hoover, says the class devoted intern to the importance of loyalty to their legislators, including keeping some opinions to themselves. "Otherwise your members won't trust you and won't give you anything substantial to do."

She also appreciated the instruction on how to track a bill. "I could go to the bill room and see exactly what had happened with a bill," she said.

Christensen, a 1993 intern to Sen. Haven Barlow, R-Layton, and Sen. Stephen Moss, R-Pleasant, claimed the course suggested to him that money drives legislative outcomes, "that no matter how good a bill is, it won't pass if the money isn't there. That premise was reinforced when he got to Capitol Hill and found that any bill with an anticipated final vote of $10,000 or more was usually doomed.

Sydney Hansen, a 1993 intern for House Majority Leader Martin Stephens, R-Parl. West, says simply that if I hadn't taken the course, I think I would have given up there and then.

Freshman Rep. Shirley Jensen, R-Sandy, took the class in 1991, served an internship in the House Majority office. She says that when she was deciding whether to run, her experiences in the course and internship tipped the balance.

"She knew when I was all about and what I needed to do to be an effective legislator," she says. "I hadn't had that kind of internships before which is why I could have run for the House of Representatives.

HIP SAC's First Year

Jaye Petersen

Although Robert Hinckley founded the Hinckley Institute of Politics with students in mind, it was not until 1992 that the institute acquired a Student Advisory Committee. The SAC was the brain-child of Ted Wilson. As the first chair of the SAC, I have watched it grow and have great expectations for it as it continues to develop.

The most important accomplishment of the first SAC was to give the student participation a tangible form. We worked late into the night to create by-laws with which to form and run the organization. We elected officers, formed committees, and had brain-storming sessions aimed at deciding exactly what the purpose of the SAC should be. Some of our ideas worked. Some did not. That is the frustration and the beauty of the first year of any organization. In 1993 the SAC will revisit its by-laws. We will decide what went right, what went wrong, and learn from both.

Some of the goals generated by the SAC since its creation are: to involve more students in Hinckley Institute activities; expand available internships; acquire more information about existing internships; assist in bringing exciting political speakers to the University; inform students about issues which significantly affect their lives, such as health care insurance and student loans; and assist students in getting involved in political activities in the community.

I would like to thank the members of the 1992/93 Hinckley Institute Student Advisory Committee, Ted Wilson, Gaye Nelson, Pat Rymo, and Carolyn Allen. Also Jim Goldfarb, student advisor, chair, Charlotte Osborn, vice-chair, and Amy Nacarato, secretary/treasurer, are extremely capable individuals who will help make the SAC a success. The SAC promises to be an integral and valuable component of the Hinckley Institute of Politics.
The 1993 Taft Seminar for Teachers

The 1993 Taft Seminar for Teachers, co-sponsored and hosted by the Hinckley Institute of Politics and the Bennion Community Service Center, was held June 14-25. It was co-directed by Ted Wilson, Director of the Hinckley Institute and Irene Fisher, Director of the Bennion Center. Fourteen elementary and secondary school teachers from throughout the region participated in the seminars. This year the group first spent four days in San Juan County, Utah, studying firsthand the problem of denied voting rights to Native American citizens of the Navajo tribe, and participating in a service project on the reservation.

"Sharing with the kids what it was like to be in a hogon all night, it was a once in a lifetime opportunity," Bette Davis, West Jordan Middle School Utah history teacher said. "I don't know that I can share all the feelings that I had going down there, but it's certainly given me a much better understanding myself." The second week, teachers participated in discussions and workshops, and heard from speakers on empowerment and political participation. Speakers included county commissioners and state representatives, Utah Governor Mike Leavitt, Utah Supreme Court Justice Christine Durham, news reporters, and Congressmen Bill Orton and Jim Hansen.

"We got so many different views from so many different people," says Peggy Nissen, American government teacher from Moab, Utah. "Then we could sort through and make some decisions for ourselves about what they said."

But it was the trip to San Juan County that seemed to make this year's seminar a powerful experience for all the participants.

"This was simply the best Taft Seminar I have been associated with," Director Ted Wilson reported. "(It) was more than a seminar. It was a total personal experience. One teacher said, 'This two weeks has changed my life.'"

"We learned so much from each other. The group was so cohesive and worked really well together," says Nissen.

"When I talk about elections and voting, I'll talk much more about people who have been denied the right to vote; talk about right here in our area because we're so close to the reservation," she said.

This year's seminar valdictorian, Navajo teacher Kenneth Joe of Montezuma Creek, served as a continual resource for the group in helping them understand the Navajo point of view.

The Robert H. Taft Institute of Government in New York sponsors seminars throughout the nation each year. Seminars focus on practical politics and opportunities for meaningful citizen involvement.

Family and Preventive Medicine Student Dennis Jolley Awarded $3,500 Robert H. Hinckley Graduate Scholarship

Political Science graduate Dennis Jolley received this year's $3500 Robert H. Hinckley Graduate Scholarship. He will pursue a masters degree in preventive medicine, through the University's Department of Family and Preventive Medicine.

Jolley previously served an internship in Washington, D.C. at the Surgeon General's office, where he stayed on for a total of nine months. He also served an internship with the International Welfare Division of the LDS Church, which is responsible for all the LDS Church's humanitarian services worldwide.

At the Surgeon General's office he wrote speeches for the Surgeon General, coordinated her schedule, and wrote news releases.

"I've always had a strong interest in health and health research," Jolley says. "It was there that I began to take political science and my interest in health and bring the two of them together."

With the LDS Church his responsibilities included work coordinating the actual delivery of relief supplies to people in Somalia, Mozambique, and worldwide.

The biggest benefit that the Hinckley internships provided for him was the opportunity to take what I was interested in and what I was doing academically and see practical applications for it. That really helped me to choose how I wanted to focus my academic efforts."

Jolley plans to pursue a Ph.D. He wants to work in an organization which emphasizes delivery of health care services and preventive medicine, particularly to mothers and children.

The scholarship, established in 1983 by Dr. Ben D. Wood, a longtime friend of Robert Hinckley, is given to students who share Hinckley's ideals and seek careers or professional involvement in government or politics.
Rocco C. Siciliano Fellowship Affords Opportunity for Five University of Utah Students to Attend Washington Center Seminars and Presidential Inauguration in Washington, D.C.

Five University of Utah students this year had the rare opportunity to attend President Clinton’s inauguration at the end of their three week stay at the Washington Center. The students were divided into career groups, and each group took part in the legal-ethics course. They visited attorneys’ offices, law schools, the Supreme Court, the Capitol, and toured the White House, among other excursions sandwiched between lectures on legal subjects.

“It was just so great to be back there and see everyone going on. I am just so glad to be there,” Frampton said. “I got to do a lot of interesting things there and a lot too,” Frampton said.

Frampton and Willis are serving as secretaries at the Hinckley Institute this year, and will continue there as a staff assistant.

Peterson, a senior in political science, plans to attend law school in M.E.A. after graduation.

For Davis, a political science senior and member of the Hinckley SAC, it was a chance to see the action and to be a part of it.

“It seems as though people spend a lot of time in the classroom, and we learn about the theoretical perspectives, but we never actually see how they are applied. It was very exciting to be there and be a part of the inauguration,” Davis said.

One funny twist during inauguration week came when Davis and Frampton were both featured on national television.

“They thought it was funny that two Republicans from the state where Clinton came in third would come back to the inauguration,” Davis said.

The Washington Center Leadership Seminar offered these students a chance to experience Washington, D.C. without having to commit to a full quarter internship.

Jensen a senior in organizational communication and political science, says there is no way she could have done a regular internship, but the program gave her the opportunity to both learn and build relationships with many interesting people.

“We met many really interesting people that had a lot of different things to say,” she said. “I enjoyed the entire experience and would recommend it to anybody.”

Delight Roberts Second Year Law Student Awarded Abrelia Clarissa Hinckley Graduate Study Award

Delight Roberts graduated in political science and has previously served two Hinckley Institute internships. Her bachelors year at the University of Utah, she attended the Washington Center Seminar and the inauguration of President George Bush. She also interned as a legal volunteer at the Legal Aid Society of Utah, trying to get protective orders for battered women.

“It makes you feel good to help people,” she says. Roberts is interested in public service, particularly in children and women’s rights.

“The Hinckley Institute was one of the best parts of my undergraduate experience,” she says. “The people really want to help you get where you’re going individually. They make sure that you get a lot out of your internships.”
Gulf War Veteran Awarded Coveted Truman Scholarship

Craig J. Schultz, political science senior, ex-marine and Gulf War veteran, was awarded a 1993 Harry S. Truman Foundation Scholarship. Approximately 85 college students nationwide receive the competitive awards, at least one from each state and then up to 40 additional recipients.

The Truman Foundation was established by Congress in 1975, and honors college students who have outstanding leadership potential, plan to pursue careers in public service and wish to attend graduate school. The scholarship will provide up to $30,000 for Schultz's senior year and graduate studies, covering tuition, books, and living expenses.

In one letter recommending Schultz for the scholarship, his commanding officer from the Persian Gulf wrote, "I could always depend on Craig to complete the mission, no matter what the difficulty. He is at his best when things are worst."

Schultz enlisted in the Marine Corps after graduating from high school in Illinois in 1987, and was chosen for a reconnaissance unit. "I had no resources for college," he says. "I was neither interested in nor prepared for college. I wanted to get out and do things. I chose reconnaissance because they're the elite of the Marine Corps and they do all the fun stuff. I like parachuting and scuba diving. And they work in smaller units and enjoy more autonomy."

After discharge from the Marines in 1991, Schultz chose to enroll at the University of Utah, and planned to major in physical therapy. He changed his mind after taking an American National Government class from Dr. Lauren Holland, associate professor of political science.

His focus now is international relations, especially security issues. As part of his scholarship application, he drafted a memo to President Clinton urging him to pressure Moscow to stop selling arms and nuclear technology to China and Iran. "I'm interested in making a contribution to our country," Schultz says. "It's a платифед but making money doesn't interest me. Creating more transparent for- ex policy does."

The scholarship application process is lengthy and requires a public policy essay and recommendation letters. Hückley committee members interviewed the numerous nominees from the U., and selected those who would repre

Scott M. Matheson Leadership Forum Scholarships Awarded

Paige Peterson

Paige Peterson and Kenneth Denos each received a $3500 Scott M. Matheson Leadership Forum Scholarship.

Peterson, a senior in political science and English, transferred to the U. from the College of Eastern Utah. She was an intern for state Senator Scott Howell during the 1992 legislative session, and did another local internship with Karen Shepherd's campaign.

Peterson has also been chairperson for the Hinckley Institute's S.A.C., and will be on the Associated Students of the University of Utah Government Affairs Board this coming year.

Her experiences have had many ben-

Kenneth Denos

"The main benefit for me was, when you get a practical knowledge of what you've been learning in your classes, it finally sinks in, and you really understand what you learned.

"Also, before I entered at the legislature I thought there's no way I'd ever want to run for any office. I thought I had a cynical view of public officials. And then when I actually got involved I saw that they were real people and they really try to help people. I thought, I could do this and could really help some people if I came at this with the right values and the right priorities."

Peterson has also volunteered this year at Utah Legal Services, and says that experience "made me realize that lawyers can do good things." She is considering attending law school.

Denos, a senior in finance and political science, has been involved with the Hinckley Student Advisory Committee, and worked as a staff intern in fall 1992 with the Richard Eyre for Governor Campaign. He was assistant to the campaign manager and in charge of fundrais-

The board keeps track of higher education-related bills in the state legislature as well as in Washington, D.C.

"I've learned that students of any major, of any political background or no political background can get involved in the Hinckley Institute through the various activities that they have, the internships and the committees," he said.

Denos will graduate from the U. this year and plans to attend law school.

The Matheson Leadership Forum was established in honor of the late governor, with the goal of enabling former recipients to reflect, write and speak about their experiences once they have left office. It has since broadened to offer scholarships to encourage students toward public service and extraordinary leadership in the tradition of Scott M. Matheson.
Bamberger State Policy Intern Coordinates 1993 Legislative Aides

Leslie Wright

Political Science graduate Leslie Wright had the opportunity to return to the Utah State Legislature one year after she was a legislative intern and see things from a different perspective.

Wright received the Governor Simon Bamberger Internship in State Policy, and served as Legislative Intern Supervisor for the 1992-93 session. In the fall she helped the legislative interns with hands-on information, and helped arrange for speakers for the class.

"I feel like I got a good background in teaching because I was given the opportunity to do public speaking and lectures. I've found a definite interest in teaching,

The First Year Law Student Wins Abrelia Clarissa Hinckley Scholarship

First-year law student Jennifer Beer received the 1993 Abrelia Clarissa Hinckley Graduate Scholarship. Beer, a political science graduate, has been involved with the Hinckley Institute in many capacities over the past two years. She interned at the Surgeon General's office and at the Utah Department of Health. She also served as the host for Coffee and Politics, and as part of the Hinckley Institute Student Advisory Committee.

"I've always thought that you need experience outside of the classroom to apply the things that you're learning," Beer says. "I think that the internships really only make your education complete and well-rounded.

"The Hinckley Institute definitely gave me the opportunity to stay involved in the community, and to develop interests that I wouldn't have been able to develop without those opportunities," she says. Beer is interested in health law and health care issues, especially minority and women's issues. She plans to stay involved in the public sector and work in policy development and consultation. Robert H. Hinckley established the scholarship in 1975 as a memorial to his wife, Abrelia Clarissa. It is awarded to a graduate woman student whose interests, formal training and life goals include a commitment to politics and community service ideals, which guided Mrs. Hinckley's life.

ABC Intern Gets First Hand Experience in the Newsroom

Lillian Horne Angelovic

Lillian Horne Angelovic, political science major and graduate in mass communication, was chosen as the intern to the ABC Washington News Bureau, winter quarter 1993.

"I was able to see not only some of the workings in Washington," Angelovic says, "but the day-to-day workings of a network news bureau.

Angelovic worked in the Good Morning America office, tracking news stories and booking interviews for the show. She also helped with GMA's live shows during the inauguration and with an ARC special, "President Clinton: Answering Children's Questions."

"But the most exciting part wasn't meeting Joan Lunden or Charlie Gibson," she says. "It was seeing the faces from TV become real people just doing their jobs. That, and interviewing Sam Donaldson was a real treat."

Watching the news "happen" and watching how it can even be "made" was another fascinating part of the internship, she says.

Angelovic has worked as a reporter and news director for the U's student-produced news program, "Newsbreak," and as a feature writer for the Daily Utah Chronicle. She has also interned locally at KTVX news, and plans to pursue a career as a television news producer.

The William H. Lawrence Internship provides students with a political communication emphasis the opportunity to spend winter quarter in Washington, D.C., at the ABC News Bureau. The internship was established in honor of William Lawrence, a political reporter for ABC. Lawrence was a close friend of Robert H. Hinckley, founder of the Hinckley Institute and one of the founders and first vice presidents of ABC.
Meredith Moss
Kenneth Bartel
Dan Jensen
Tara McDonald

The 1992/93 Rocco C. Siciliano internships went to Meredith Moss, political science undergraduate; Kenneth Bartel, political science senior; Dan Jensen, senior in chemistry; and Tara McDonald, junior in political science.

Moss spent fall quarter, 1992, as an intern at the U.S. Supreme Court. She gave tours to dignitaries, judicial officers, guests of the justices, and numerous educational groups from schools across the country. She also did research projects for the curator's office, which deals with historic memorabilia and documenting historic events at the court.

After the internship ended, Moss stayed at the court another quarter, coordinating and scheduling the tours. She says she really enjoyed the opportunity to be in Washington at that time.

"To go through and watch an election happen in November, and then to see the follow-up for that in January with the inauguration was really memorable," she said. "For me I think it was probably a once in a lifetime experience."

"It's just incredible to be part of that kind of momentum, and to be in a crowd of 500,000 people who have all gathered to witness the peaceful transition of power."

Moss says she also has strong memories of the funeral of retired Justice Thurgood Marshall.

"To be part of something so intimately related to a figure like that was really very striking to me," she said.

Moss is now working in the clerks office of the U.S. District Court for the State of Utah.

Kenneth Bartel and Dan Jensen both worked for the National Science Foundation in the U.S. Office of Legislative and Public Affairs.

Bartel was in Washington spring quarter and finished coordinating events for this year's Science and Technology Week, which was held April 25 through May 1.

"It was really interesting doing things for the National Science and Technology Week because they let me do everything," he said.

"They let me go to all the events, and I met a lot of people with various organizations, such as the National Academy of Science. It was really interesting corresponding with them."

After the week ended, Bartel had the opportunity to attend congressional hearings on issues related to the National Science Foundation. His reports were included in the NSF's congressional report.

Jensen, a senior in chemistry, was there summer quarter, 1993. He helped with a program at a county fair, and attended meetings with NSF corporate sponsors regarding the future of National Science and Technology Week.

"It's helped me expand my horizons to see more of how politics works and how science is related in the political process, and just to understand the whole process better," Jensen said. "I think it's good for all people to be involved and understand how our government works, so that if they disagree with certain things they can work to change those things."

Tara McDonald, junior in political science, spent last fall quarter at the Senate Republican Conference, helping with television and radio broadcasting services for the Republican senators.

"We went out with the cameramen and filmed news conferences that they held. Some were at the capitol. Some were in the offices. Sometimes we'd go out once, and sometimes we'd go out four, five, six times a day," McDonald said. "I got to go over to Senator Dole's office and film him. One time I got to go to the White House and film President Bush."

Senators also came into the studio for live cable TV broadcasts, which McDonald and other interns helped operate the equipment on.

After the election, she coordinated a job bank for Republicans, which she says was "kind of sad, but interesting."

"It was fun because we got to see how government works. It kind of gave me insight into what government is really like," she said.

Rocco C. Siciliano, U. alumnus and Hinckley benefactor, established the endowment with his company, ARA Services, to fund internships in public policy. Siciliano served in Washington, D.C., as undersecretary of Commerce, assistant secretary of Labor, and special assistant for personnel management for President Dwight Eisenhower.

Rishel Intern to the Composting Council

Political science senior John Romney was named Rishel intern and served fall quarter, 1992 in Washington, D.C., with the Composting Council.

The Council is "an environmental trade association representing the interests of organizations involved in recycling and organic recycling," Romney said. "It was not simply government experience. I got a lot of private sector experience as well."

Romney worked to build a national database that will contain locations and information about all recycling plants in North America. The database will be connected to a 1-800 telephone line and will help provide locations and answers about recycling for anyone interested.

He also helped with a convention sponsored by the council, and attended weekly conventions as a representative of the council.

Romney, who also served as a state legislative intern in 1992, says the opportunity to go to Washington, D.C. gave him "real world experience — experience you can't get in class."

Following his internship, he returned to the Composting Council during spring quarter and continued the work he began as a Hinckley intern.
Political Science Senior Receives Scott M. Matheson Leadership Forum Study Award

Megan Sather, senior in political science with a Russian minor, received the Scott M. Matheson Leadership Forum $1,000 study award.

Sather worked on Karon Shepherd's campaign for the U.S. House of Representatives, beginning in 1991 through a Hinckley Institute internship. She now works for Utahs For Choice, and enjoys being involved in local politics.

"It's given me a chance to really feel like I could affect some part of the political process," Sather says. "It's also given me the chance to meet and work with wonderful people... with Democrats, Republicans, Independents, non-political types... and just to gain knowledge.

That's one thing I think the Hinckley Institute is wonderful about is they give young people a chance to get involved, to get some knowledge and experience that otherwise would not be available.

That first internship has led me into great political circles where I can really work to do what I believe in.

Sather has also been involved in the U's political science S.A.C., College Democrats, and helped found the Russian Club. She volunteers for the foreign exchange program AFS, and was selected a foreign exchange student to Portugal.

That was where I got my political insights, I think," she says. "It's how father (in Portugal) worked for the United Nations, so that got me interested in international politics.

It gives you a whole different perspective on the world. I come back from Portugal and it solidified all my political beliefs, and I knew that... then had to do something about it.

Sather even moved and interested in local politics now.

I went into school thinking I'd like international politics, but I got involved in the local scene, and the people are wonderful and it's fun, and so I stuck with it," she says.

Sather plans to attend law school, and is interested in going into political consulting or working internationally with the diplomatic corp.

Eccles Honor Awarded to Jess Bromley

Business student Jess Bromley was selected as this year's George S. Eccles intern to Mines England, a public administration group in Washington, D.C.

Bromley spent winter quarter doing a "variety of different things," such as representing several single cities at meetings for the U.S. Congress of Mayors. Being in Washington-dwelling the change of administrations was a real opportunity to see the wide-ranging impact of changes in the government, he said.

"It was fairly interesting to see the different slants people had on what he (President Clinton) was going to do and what everyone was thinking," he said. "I've never seen people give so much concern to what could possibly happen.

"It was really an exposure to a different environment than what you have access to here in Utah. There's a different pace back there and there was kind of exciting," he said.

Bromley also worked with a group of Asian businessmen and educators, here to study the market system. He gave them a tour of the student-run restaurant on American history, and was able to learn a little about Albania in the process.

Womens Studies and Sociology Senior Designated Frank E. Moss Intern

Kelsey Lewis, sociology and women's studies senior, was chosen for the Senator Frank E. Moss internship at the Caring Institute in Washington, D.C.

The Caring Institute is a non-profit organization dedicated to recognizing Americans whose lives exemplify caging and public service. Each year they search for ten adults and young adults, who have been nominated by community leaders. The Institute conducts reviews of the hundreds of people who are nominated each year, and present the awards in December.
Business Graduate Matt Gardner
Designated First Robert H. Hinckley, Jr. Environmental Quality Internship

Matt Gardner, graduate in business, received the first Robert H. Hinckley, Jr. environmental internship to the Utah State Department of Environmental Quality. He helped set up the internship program there beginning in November 1992.

Gardner worked in the Policy Planning and External Affairs Division, and helped with a new cooperative program with the Environmental Protection Agency. The program involves holding town meetings throughout the state, to find out how to prioritize environmental issues in the state and region.

The information from the town meetings is then organized in a database Gardner helps set up, and sent on to the EPA.

For Gardner, the internship was an opportunity to see how government, business, and environmental interests can come together and both clash and move toward a consensus on an issue.

"It gave me a broader understanding of what is involved in addressing the environmental issues," he said. "I could understand the difficulty in reaching a consensus and reaching decisions."

Gardner has also served an internship with the Senate Banking Committee office in Washington, D.C.

Jenny Avis Political Science Senior
Chosen 1992-93

Jenny Avis

Jenny Avis was chosen as the Ben D. Wood intern to Medical Care Development International, and spent summer quarter 1993 in Washington, D.C. Avis was able to work with many people from Portuguese-speaking African countries. She translated resumes from Portuguese to English, and translated a procedures manual from English into Portuguese.

MCD's work focuses on bringing medical programs into developing countries around the world.

Avis is a senior in political science, and is considering attending graduate school.

The Ben D. Wood Memorial Endowment supports and recognizes outstanding students serving public policy internships in Washington, D.C. Funding was provided through a major grant from Wood, a longtime friend of the late Robert H. Hinckley, with IBM matching funds.

Nelson helped plan the Academy’s annual conference, and helped select other interns for the Academy’s own internship program.

The National Academy of Social Insurance is a non-profit, non-partisan organization which focuses on social security and other social insurances, and how they can be better utilized.

Nelson says she learned a lot about social security, a subject she knew very little about before. She is now working for a health insurance company.

The internship was established in 1986 to former Blackley intern to honor R.J. Snow, former Institute director for ten years.
